

MARTIN LUTHER KING DAY

January 19th 2009

I have a dream.

I have a dream that my children will go to school with white girls and white boys that they will be mixed with other cultures.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that the world be beautiful, people will live together without discrimination, without violence, without war.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day children won't work before 18 in all countries of the world to preserve their health.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day, in this nation, unemployment will not exist anymore.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that all the people will be careful of their environment.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day all children will have a home and a loving family to go home to everyday after school, no abuse, just love.

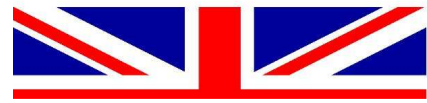

This is our hope.

1BPC1, travail collectif

JANUARY 2009: Black History Month in the USA

ENGLISH CLASS CORNER

A NEW ERA

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. But it has never been so! In this article we see the evolution of black Americans' life between 1960s and today.

In the past, MLK Jr wanted a nation where black persons would not be judged after the colour of their skin, appearances. For example, black students needed a bodyguard to go to school. Moreover, a black person was obliged to give up her bus seat to a white person. It was segregation, a racist concept.

Today, black Americans are asked to assume roles among the most powerful people in the world. Moreover, there is always black march to fight against black racist injustice. Finally, a black president was elected on November 4th 2008. He is the hope of the black population.

To conclude, Barack Obama is remaking the US. I think, it's a new era for black Americans. The new president can help his black brothers.

Sébastien Varinois TBPC

January 20th 2009

BARACK OBAMA was inaugurated
PRESIDENT of the USA